

British Retailers Set to Cash-in on Winter Blues

The onset of bad weather and shorter evenings prompt 92 per cent of Brits to hit shops and bars in a bid to cheer themselves up according to new research from VoucherCodes.co.uk, which reveals the retailers benefit from a £4.6 billion a month boost from Brits looking for a pick-me-up after a bad day.

The onset of bad weather and shorter evenings prompt 92 per cent of Brits to hit shops and bars in a bid to cheer themselves up according to new research from VoucherCodes.co.uk, which reveals the retailers benefit from a £4.6 billion* a month boost from Brits looking for a pick-me-up after a bad day.

The study found the average Brit will spend £20.36 more on a 'bad day' to try in a bid to improve their mood, and with each adult having an average of five bad days each month retailers offering convenience options, quick boost products and alcohol will benefit from repeat custom.

Takeaways are the mood-booster of choice for most, with over half (53 per cent) reaching for the takeaway menu when they're having a bad day – spending an average of £16.45 each time. Pubs and bars also profit, with two in five (40 per cent) visiting their local pub or bar to unwind, each spending £18.43 on average. A further one in five (20 per cent) will splash out £31.05 opting for retail therapy on their local high street with two in five (38 per cent) buying clothes; a quarter (28 per cent) investing in new shoes and one in three (36 per cent) picking up something for the home.

Top ten pick-me-up purchases:

1. A takeaway
2. Alcohol in a pub or bar
3. Alcohol to take home
4. Clothes
5. Homeware
6. Chocolate
7. Shoes
8. Cake
9. Flowers
10. Bags

A night of disturbed sleep is the top cause of grumpiness amongst UK adults, with two in five (43 per cent) stating this sets them up for a bad day. A third of Brits (31 per cent) will be put down by a bad day at the office and a further one in three (31 per cent) blame arguing with their partner for a drop in mood.

Claire Davenport, Managing Director of VoucherCodes.co.uk commented: “With colder, wetter weather creeping in retailers can expect to see a boost in sales as consumers hit local pubs, high streets and takeaways looking to cheer themselves up. Whilst £20 doesn't sound like much, with 92 per cent of the UK adult population having five bad days a month it adds up to a £4.6 billion a month spend nationwide – which is a big opportunity for Britain's retailers.”

Notes to editors:

Research of 2,000 UK adults conducted by One Poll on behalf of VoucherCodes.co.uk between 13th and 20th October 2014.

* Based on ONS adult population of 49,280,805

92.3 per cent have a bad day 5 times a month = 45,683,306 people
£20.36 spent each time x 5 = £101.80 x 45,683,306 = £4,649,799,186 per month
