Holiday Shoppers Start Early and More Are Searching for Deals

Based on historical trends, RetailMeNot is expecting holiday shopping and browsing to take off the first week of November. Last year on November 7, RetailMeNot saw a 21% uptick in shoppers searching for deals. Additionally, among consumers surveyed in 2016, nearly half of shoppers (46%) said they plan to start their holiday shopping before November 1. Deal seeking remains top of mind with more than 60% of consumers surveyed planning to shop sales and promotions, up from 51% in 2015.

"It's important for retailers to ensure they enter consumers' consideration set early in the season," said Marissa Tarleton, chief marketing officer of North America for RetailMeNot, Inc. "Having the right promotional mix is key for reaching these shoppers."

Mobile Drives Shoppers In-Store

Nearly 3 in 4 shoppers (73%) say they are planning to shop in brick-and-mortar stores this season, and 50% said that the deals they find will help them determine which days to shop in-store. The top mobile shopping days continue to coincide with the biggest in-store shopping days, with Black Friday taking the #1 spot followed by the weekend before Christmas. The top three categories where shoppers wish to see more in-store offers this year are home and garden, multi-category, and health and beauty.

"We continue to see mobile content drive more sales and foot traffic for brick-and-mortar stores," says Tarleton. "Retailers have a big opportunity to acquire new customers this holiday season via their mobile marketing efforts."

More Deals Bring More Joy This Season

Shoppers will do just about anything for a good deal during the holidays. In fact, 46% would spend a full day hunting online for the best price, 26% would travel more than an hour to visit a store with a great deal, and 23% plan to line up outside store doors before they open in order to snag the best prices on the hottest products.

Women prefer free shipping options more than men (35% vs. 26%), while males tend to lean more toward specific product deals than females (21% vs. 14%). Overall, though, free shipping leads the pack with 31% of the general population citing that they are likely to spend more money with a brand or retailer who offers to pick up those costs, followed by a percent off the total purchase (28%) and specific product deals (17%), which round out the top three preferred savings methods.

Shoppers will be seeking deals in these categories:

- Electronics (smartphones, TVs, etc.): 56%
- Clothing and Shoes: 51%
- Toys: 31%
- Restaurants and Entertainment: 20%
- Jewelry: 18%
- Travel: 15%

While consumers plan to hit the shops more this season, they also plan on dining out more frequently for a post-shopping nosh. Nearly half of shoppers (45%) say they dine out most often during the holiday season, and 66% of them are more likely to look for restaurant savings before they chow down.

About the Surveys

This study is based on findings from the RetailMeNot Promotions Index (<https://www.retailmenot.com/corp/index/>) and internal data collections from over 500,000 offers for 50,000 retailers in the U.S., including engagement insights from millions of consumers. Forecasting models for 2016 holiday predictions are based on data and stats pulled from historical shopper insights in 2014 and 2015.

Additionally, two surveys from RetailMeNot, Inc. gathered consumer sentiment and shopping preferences for the 2016 holiday shopping season: a Google Consumer Survey and a RetailMeNot, Inc. survey conducted by Kelton Global. The Google Consumer Survey was conducted between August 5 and 9, 2016, in which 1,015 U.S. consumers aged 18 and over were surveyed regarding their holiday spending and preferences.
