

Nobody's Doing It -- Digital Photos' Dirty Little Secret

National Poll Results Show Most Do Not Have a Photo Protection Plan

PRNewswire
AUSTIN, Texas

According to a GfK/ Roper Poll conducted for www.CheapStingyBargains.com, 77% of Americans admit that they do not regularly make back-up copies of photos for safe keeping onto a DVD or CD. One in six people have lost special photos that they valued.

Everyone's Gone Digital, But...

While 66% of respondents report using a digital camera, 47% wish we were still in the pre-digital age, when people gave you real copies of photos instead of digital ones.

Photo Albums Might be a Thing of the Past

50% of respondents admit we are taking digital photos, but not developing them. While only 15% report permanently losing photos, one quarter (24%) develop photos but aren't backing them up.

Photo Protection Plans Are Not as Common as You Would Think

Only 6% are actually using an online storage site, 18% are developing photos and using either home or work computers as a back-up, and 18% are using a CD or DVD. 34% don't know what we're doing for back-up. (and it isn't just photos - only 13% of Americans say they backup their music / iTunes library more often than they back up their photos.)

"So many people have photos of trips and family they have downloaded on their computers that a computer crash can be devastating," said Mike Glozman, founder of CheapStingyBargains.com. "We regularly hear from customers on our site who are buying a new computer to replace an old one that crashed, yet their photos and documents are often lost forever."

CheapStingyBargains.com knows how much you love your photos. The 75% of respondents who took photos of special events captured

- Family gatherings (56%)
- Kids' birthdays (55%)
- Travel (55%)
- Events with friends (53%)
