

Nearly Half of Adults Have Used In-Store Coupons or Online Promotional Codes when Holiday Shopping this Season

A Majority Still Have a Fair Amount of Shopping to Do, with 20% Waiting to Find Last Minute Deals

Austin, TX and New York, NY, December 15, 2011 – Few adults have already completed all of their holiday shopping, leaving many shoppers with gifts still to buy, according to a new Ipsos poll conducted on behalf of RetailMeNot.com (www.retailmenot.com). Just 16% of adults surveyed claimed to have finished all of their shopping.

24% of adults surveyed reported that they are at least three quarters done with their holiday shopping, but still have a few more things to buy, while 12% reported that they are at least halfway done. Still, a plurality (33%) reported that they've done less than a quarter of their holiday shopping and that they still have a lot to buy. Another nine percent have bought some things but still have a lot on their shopping list. Six percent report that they are not doing any holiday shopping.

- Men (46%) and adults under 55 (45%) are among those most likely to have much of their shopping still to do. A minority of those adults surveyed appear to be strategically delaying their holiday shopping, as one in five adults (20%) say that they are waiting to make big purchases for the holiday shopping season because they are anticipating last minute deals. Still, 79% say that this is not the case.

- Midwesterners (34%), part-time workers (33%), those with a household income of $25,000 or less (28%), and adults under 35 (27%) are among those most likely to say that they are waiting until the last minute to shop in hopes of finding great deals. When it comes to holiday shopping budgets, nearly half of those adults surveyed (47%) are spending about as much as they expected. Of the adults surveyed, more are likely to be spending less than planned (31%) than they are to be going over-budget (15%), 5% are not buying any gifts for their loved ones this holiday season, and 2% were unsure about their holiday spending.

- Parents are less likely to be coming in under-budget than are adults without a child under 18 (25% vs. 34%).

- Those with a household income of $25,000 or less are more likely to be spending less than expected than are more affluent adults (47% vs. 25%). Coupons may be helping shoppers stay on budget, as nearly half (47%) of adults surveyed report that they have used a printable coupon in-store or online promotion code when shopping on the Internet to get deals such as a "certain percentage off," "certain dollar amount off," "buy 1, get one free," or "free shipping." At the same time, a majority (53%) may be overlooking these savings opportunities.

- College graduates (62%), full-time workers (56%), those with a household income of at least $25,000 (56%), and women (53%) are among those more likely to have used an in-store coupon or online promotional code when a purchasing gift.

These are some of the findings of an Ipsos poll conducted December 9-12, 2011. For the poll, a nationally representative sample of 1,000 randomly-selected adults aged 18 and over residing in the U.S. were interviewed by telephone via Ipsos' U.S. Telephone Express omnibus. With a sample of this size, the results are considered accurate within ± 3.1 percentage points. The margin of error will be larger within regions and for other sub-groupings of the survey population. These data were weighted to ensure the sample's regional and age/gender composition reflects that of the actual U.S. population according to data from the U.S. Census Bureau.
